Share full article

OPINION

DAVID BROOKS

What's Happening Is Not Normal. America Needs an Uprising That Is Not Normal. April 17, 2025

Constitutions to restrain power, international alliances to promote peace, legal systems to peacefully settle disputes, scientific institutions to cure disease, news outlets to advance public understanding, charitable organizations to ease suffering,

But over the centuries, people built the sinews of civilization:

businesses to build wealth and spread prosperity, and universities to preserve, transmit and advance the glories of our way of life. These institutions make our lives sweet, loving and creative, rather than nasty, brutish and short. Trumpism is threatening all of that. It is primarily about the acquisition of power — power for its own sake. It is a multifront assault to make the earth a playground for ruthless men, so of course any institutions that might restrain power must be weakened or destroyed. Trumpism is about ego, appetite and acquisitiveness and is driven by a primal aversion to the higher elements of the human spirit — learning, compassion, scientific wonder, the pursuit

So far, we have treated the various assaults of President Trump and the acolytes in his administration as a series of different attacks. In one lane they are going after law firms. In another they savaged of justice.

U.S.A.I.D. In another they're attacking our universities. On yet another front they're undermining NATO and on another they're upending global trade. ADVERTISEMENT

But that's the wrong way to think about it. These are not separate battles. This is a single effort to undo the parts of the civilizational order that might restrain Trump's acquisition of power. And it will take a concerted response to beat it back.

Sign up for the Opinion Today newsletter Get expert analysis of the news and a guide to the big ideas shaping the world every weekday morning. Get it sent to your inbox. So far, each sector Trump has assaulted has responded independently — the law firms seek to protect themselves, the universities, separately, try to do the same. Yes, a group of firms banded together in support of the firm Perkins Coie, but in other cases it's individual law firms trying to secure their separate peace with Trump. Yes, Harvard eventually drew a line in the sand, but Columbia cut a deal. This is a disastrous strategy that ensures that Trump will trample on one victim after another. He divides and conquers. Slowly, many of us are realizing that we need to band together. But even these efforts are insular and fragmented. Several members of the Big Ten conference are working on forming an alliance to defend academic freedom. Good. But that would be 18 schools out of roughly 4,000 degree-granting American colleges and universities.

Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez. But this, too, is an ineffective way to respond to Trump; those partisan rallies make this fight seem like a normal contest between Democrats and Republicans. What is happening now is not normal politics. We're seeing an assault on the fundamental institutions of our civic life, things we should all swear loyalty to — Democrat, independent or Republican.

ADVERTISEMENT

countermovement — has been the rallies led by Bernie Sanders and

So far, the only real hint of something larger — a mass

It's time for a comprehensive national civic uprising. It's time for scientific community, and civil servants and beyond to form one

he's going to be stopped is if he's confronted by some movement coordinated mass movement. Trump is about power. The only way

Americans in universities, law, business, nonprofits and the Know someone who would want to read this? Share the column.

that possesses rival power.

Peoples throughout history have done exactly this when confronted movement. (Think of the civil rights movement at Selma.) Right now, Trumpism is dividing civil society; if done right, the civic uprising can begin to divide the forces of Trumpism. Chenoweth and Stephan emphasize that this takes coordination. There doesn't always have to be one charismatic leader, but there does have to be one backbone organization, one coordinating body that does the work of coalition building. In his book "Upheaval," Jared Diamond looked at countries that moving somewhere new. Let's take the universities. I've been privileged to teach at American universities off and on for nearly 30 years and I get to visit a dozen or two others every year. These are the crown jewels of American life. They are hubs of scientific and entrepreneurial innovation. In a million ways, the scholars at universities help us understand ourselves and our world. I have seen it over and over: A kid comes on campus as a freshman, inquisitive but unformed. By senior year, there is something impressive about her. She is awakened, cultured, a critical thinker. The universities have performed their magic once again.

to a diploma divide. If the same affluent families come out on top generation after generation, then no one should be surprised if the losers flip over the table. In other words, a civic uprising has to have a short-term vision and but hard on the causes of Trumpism — one that offers a positive vision. Whether it's the universities, the immigration system or the global economy, we can't go back to the status quo that prevailed when Trump first rode down the escalator. ADVERTISEMENT demonstrations or attend rallies that I'm not covering as a journalist. But this is what America needs right now. Trump is shackling the greatest institutions in American life. We have

David Brooks is an Opinion columnist for The Times, writing about political, social and cultural trends. @nytdavidbrooks A version of this article appears in print on April 18, 2025, Section A, Page 23 of the New York edition by an authoritarian assault. In their book, "Why Civil Resistance Works," Erica Chenoweth and Maria J. Stephan looked at hundreds of nonviolent uprisings. These movements used many different tools at their disposal — lawsuits, mass rallies, strikes, work slowdowns, boycotts and other forms of noncooperation and resistance.

READ 4K COMMENTS

These movements began small and built up. They developed clear messages that appealed to a variety of groups. They shifted the narrative so the authoritarians were no longer on permanent offense. Sometimes they used nonviolent means to provoke the regime into taking violent action, which shocks the nation, undercuts the regime's authority and further strengthens the endured crises and recovered. He points out that the nations that recover don't catastrophize — they don't say everything is screwed up and we need to burn it all down. They take a careful inventory of what is working well and what is working poorly. Leaders assume responsibility for their own share of society's problems. ADVERTISEMENT country with catastrophically low levels of institutional trust. University presidents, big law firms, media organizations and corporate executives face a wall of skepticism and cynicism. If they are going to participate in a mass civic uprising against Trump, they establishment sins that gave rise to Trump in the first place. They have to show that they are democratically seeking to reform their have to show the rest of the country that they understand the institutions. This is not just defending the establishment; it's

This struck me as essential advice for Americans today. We live in a

People flock from all over the world to admire our universities. But like all institutions, they have their flaws. Many have allowed themselves to become shrouded in a stifling progressivism that tells half the country: Your voices don't matter. Through admissions policies that favor rich kids, the elite universities have contributed

Add the Sunday Times in print to your subscription. 50% off the first year. Learn more.

 (X)

© 2025 The New York Times Company

I'm really not a movement guy. I don't naturally march in a long-term vision. Short term: Stop Trump. Foil his efforts. Pile on the lawsuits. Turn some of his followers against him. The second is a long-term vision of a fairer society that is not just hard on Trump, nothing to lose but our chains. The Times is committed to publishing a diversity of letters to the editor. We'd like to hear what you think about this or any of our articles. Here are some tips. And here's our email: letters@nytimes.com. Follow the New York Times Opinion section on Facebook, Instagram, TikTok, Bluesky, WhatsApp and Threads.

Share full article

with the headline: Time for a Civic Uprising. Order Reprints I Today's Paper I Subscribe ADVERTISEMENT

NYTCo Contact Us Accessibility Work with us Advertise T Brand Studio Your Ad Choices Privacy Policy Terms of Service Terms of Sale Site Map Help Subscriptions

6